Plan a focused lesson

Level and alignment

Grade 6 • Ohio • Reading; RL.6.6. Focus: Explain how first-person narration develops a narrator's perspective.

What is included

One cover; one teacher guide; one mini-lesson with two explained models; 1 original text/reference section(s); 16 practice tasks on four pages; one four-task exit check; four answer-key pages covering all 20 tasks; two access/source/license pages. Student texts are original, not extracted from released tests.

Time and sequence

Two 30–40-minute sessions plus a 10–15-minute exit check; extended writing or speech rehearsal may take longer. Model first; use tasks 1–4 to check readiness; practice the remainder in short groups; give tasks 17–20 without the key.

Preparation

Print student pages separately from teacher pages. Provide pencils and extra paper; oral-response learners need an adult recorder. Review word meanings and prerequisite decoding or sentence skills. No paid app, novel, or external reading is required.

Student directions

Read the lesson and supplied text or reference. Attempt each task before viewing the key. Explain when asked. Use separate paper for full drafts or longer answers; the PDF is not a fillable form.

Learn the move

Point of view describes the narration; perspective describes the narrator's outlook. A first-person narrator tells only what they observe, remember, or think, not everyone's inner thoughts. Trace word choices and selected details. A narrator may revise an interpretation when new evidence appears.

Model 1 • “I called the delay a disaster; my sister called it a break.” What can you infer?

The speaker views the delay negatively, while the sister's description suggests a benefit. Their labels reveal perspectives.

Model 2 • Does first person make every interpretation true?

No. It gives access to the narrator's interpretation, which can be incomplete or mistaken.

Try the task first. Then compare the reasoning, not just the final word.

The Window Seat

[1] I claimed the window seat before our club's bus trip. A perfect view, I thought, and no one talking over my sketches. When Lena sat beside me with a folded map, I pictured a long morning of interruptions.

[2] At the first turn she lifted a finger toward the glass. "That old station—" "I'm drawing," I said. She folded the map smaller. For the next ten minutes I filled my page with rooflines and ignored the quiet beside me.

[3] The bus stopped at a blocked road. From my precious window I could see only a wall. Lena opened her map, then closed it when I glanced over. On its back was a careful drawing of the station, with three different roof shapes labeled.

[4] "You sketch buildings?" I asked. She nodded. "My grandfather helped repair that roof. I wanted to show you the curved beams."

[5] I moved my notebook between us. The wall had become less interesting. When the bus finally turned, Lena pointed out a row of arches I would have missed. I still had the window seat, but now the view felt wider.

Practice • Read, reason, respond

Read the lesson and supplied text or reference. Attempt each task before viewing the key. Explain when asked. Use separate paper for full drafts or longer answers; the PDF is not a fillable form.

1. Identify the narrative point of view and a pronoun that proves it.

2. What does the narrator initially want from the seat?

3. How does “interruptions” frame Lena before she speaks much?

4. What can we directly know about Lena’s thoughts?

Practice • Read, reason, respond

Read the lesson and supplied text or reference. Attempt each task before viewing the key. Explain when asked. Use separate paper for full drafts or longer answers; the PDF is not a fillable form.

5. Why does the narrator mention ignoring the quiet?

6. How is “precious window” ironic when the bus stops?

7. Which detail first challenges the narrator’s assumption?

8. What does Lena’s family connection add?

Practice • Read, reason, respond

Read the lesson and supplied text or reference. Attempt each task before viewing the key. Explain when asked. Use separate paper for full drafts or longer answers; the PDF is not a fillable form.

9. Why does moving the notebook between them matter?

10. Explain “the view felt wider.”

11. Track one word/detail from before and after the change.

12. Can we conclude Lena intended to annoy the narrator?

Practice • Read, reason, respond

Read the lesson and supplied text or reference. Attempt each task before viewing the key. Explain when asked. Use separate paper for full drafts or longer answers; the PDF is not a fillable form.

13. How might Lena narrate paragraph 2 differently?

14. What effect does withholding Lena’s explanation until paragraph 4 have?

15. Write a claim about the narrator’s growth supported by two details.

16. Rewrite one sentence from a neutral third-person view. Explain the change.

Exit check • Apply the skill

Try without the answer key. Show evidence or reasoning when asked. Use separate paper for longer responses.

17. Is point of view the same as perspective? Explain with this story.

18. Name the turning-point evidence.

19. Explain how the final sentence reflects a new outlook.

20. Support an alternative interpretation: the narrator feels embarrassed.

Answers and response criteria

1. First person; I/my/us as narrator participates.
2. An uninterrupted view for sketching.
3. As an obstacle/nuisance, revealing the narrator's assumption.
4. Only what she says or displays; narrator does not directly access her thoughts.
5. Shows deliberate withdrawal and focus on own activity, making later change visible.

Accept equivalent correct answers and well-supported interpretations. Sample writing is guidance, not a required script.

Answers and response criteria

6. The highly valued view now shows only a wall; the supposedly useful seat offers little.
7. Lena's careful labeled station drawing reveals a shared interest.
8. She has specific knowledge of the roof's repair, not merely an urge to interrupt.
9. An action showing willingness to share and collaborate.
10. Metaphorically, shared knowledge broadens what the narrator notices; window itself has not grown.

Accept equivalent correct answers and well-supported interpretations. Sample writing is guidance, not a required script.

Answers and response criteria

11. Before: interruptions/ignored quiet. After: notebook between us/arches/wider. Explain changing openness.
12. No; the map/drawing and explanation support an interest in sharing architecture.
13. Might describe disappointment or uncertainty after being cut off; label as plausible, not confirmed thought.
14. Readers initially see her through narrator's assumption, then reconsider with narrator.
15. From guarding solitude to valuing shared knowledge; cite refusal and shared notebook/arches.

Accept equivalent correct answers and well-supported interpretations. Sample writing is guidance, not a required script.

Answers and response criteria

16. Example: The bus window faced a wall. Removes possessive/evaluative “precious,” reducing narrator judgment.

17. No. First-person form remains; narrator’s outlook on Lena changes.

18. Lena’s labeled drawing and account of her grandfather’s work.

19. The narrator values another person’s insight alongside personal observation.

20. Can cite change after abrupt dismissal and moving notebook as repair; accept supported inference, not a stated certainty.

Accept equivalent correct answers and well-supported interpretations. Sample writing is guidance, not a required script.

Access and next teaching steps

AIG

Ask for a counterexample, an alternative supported interpretation, or a newly written item with an explanation. Add depth rather than speed.

504

Follow the individual plan: breaks, enlarged print, extra time, reduced copying, or an alternative response method as documented. These are classroom options, not a statement of permitted test accommodations.

EC

Follow the IEP; show one task at a time, model the first decision, and permit dictated reasoning when appropriate. For decoding practice, distinguish an adult-read direction from an adult-read target word.

ESL

Preview task verbs and key vocabulary, allow home-language planning, and offer “My answer is ___ because ___.” Evaluate the targeted skill separately from unrelated language errors. For French, retain the target French sentence while explaining directions in a familiar language.

Use the exit evidence

For each exit task, record 2 = accurate and complete for the stated prompt; 1 = partly accurate or missing a requested explanation; 0 = not yet demonstrated. Total 0–8 is a local teaching note, not a standardized score. For oral tasks do not penalize spelling or handwriting. Revisit the exact type of error rather than assigning a diagnostic label.

Next lesson: model one missed decision, let the learner try a new example, and compare the explanation. Extend only after the learner can explain the targeted skill.

Alignment, sources, and license

The objective is original wording describing a focused part of the cited standard; this is not a full curriculum or official practice test. Uses the current 2026 revised standard; no claim is made that existing released tests have been updated to this revision.

Research limit: official released-assessment retrieval was unsuccessful in this run. This packet is standards-focused classroom instruction; it makes no released-test alignment, timing, or scoring claim.

Print US Letter at actual size. Text is selectable; enlarging or digital annotation is optional. This is not a tagged-accessibility-certified or fillable PDF. Keep teacher keys separate. No certified Lexile score is claimed.

Single-teacher license: the purchaser may make copies for their own students and use the file in a restricted class LMS. No resale, public posting, sharing of complete files, or redistribution. Original passages, questions, and teaching explanations; official standards and reference sources retain their owners' rights. No agency endorsement. Official store logo reused unchanged.
